Social Interventions for Support
During Treatment for Endometrial Cancer and Recurrence - SISTER Study

Leading, engaging, and building community

Endometrial cancer (EC) is one of the most common gynecologic cancers in the United States - more common than cervical and ovarian cancer. It also has one of the worst disparities in all cancers in the U.S. - Black women are almost twice as likely to die from EC compared with white women. Both Black endometrial cancer survivors and medical researchers have found that social isolation is a reason for distress, loneliness, and difficulty completing treatment, which can lead to lower survival.

The SISTER study is designed to understand how social support can decrease social isolation and increase EC treatment completion.

SISTER WAS MADE WITH YOU IN MIND

This study was made by women who understand your experience and who want to ensure that Black women have the support during treatment.

Alongside these women, the SISTER Study is led by Dr. Kemi Doll, a gynecologic oncologist at the University of Washington in Seattle. Dr. Doll's research focuses on improving outcomes for women with endometrial cancer.

By participating in the community effort of the SISTER Study, you will contribute to knowledge about how best to improve care for Black people with cancer.

WHAT'S INVOLVED?

Get Support

If you choose to participate, the computer will assign you to one of three groups to receive either one-on-one, group, or educational support.

Share Your Experience

The SISTER study spans six months. During that time you will help advance endometrial cancer research by completing study surveys, interviews, and sharing your treatment information with the study team.

We value your time. You will receive up to $105 for completing SISTER Study surveys.

INTERESTED?

LEARN HOW YOU CAN ENROLL
IN THE SISTER STUDY

Enrolling in the SISTER Study is free. To participate you must be an African American/Black woman diagnosed with endometrial cancer who is at least 18 years old.
